Forecast For Southwest England
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Friday 19 Mar 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
A damp and murky start, some sunny spells later.

Today:
A cloudy and breezy start, with patchy rain or drizzle. A few brighter breaks in the west. The patchy rain will edge westwards through the day, as cloud breaks from the southeast, giving spells of late sunshine. Winds ease later. Maximum temperature 12 deg C (54 deg F).

Tonight:
Some clear spells through the evening, though some patchy rain may persist too. A touch of grass frost for some before cloud gradually returns from the north by the morning. Minimum temperature 1 deg C (34 deg F).

Saturday:
Another rather murky day, with low cloud and patchy drizzle for most. One or two brighter breaks may develop in the afternoon. Turning a little breezy overnight. Maximum temperature 12 deg C (54 deg F).

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
Staying mostly cloudy through this period, and largely dry, though the odd light shower or spell of drizzle remains possible. Any sunny spells are most likely on Tuesday. Feeling mild.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.